

RAISE GOOD STOCK.

The San Francisco Chronicle says:

Beyond the slightly additional fast colt every one knows, or ought to know, that it does not cost a dollar more to raise a good horse or cow, than it does to feed a poor one. And yet all over the State one can see calves and colts unknown to the herd book, being reared at considerable expense, only to be sold at least at a price which does not cover the cost of keeping. Take two farmers living side by side. One will begrudge the $25 or $50 necessary for the service of a good blooded stallion, and will accordingly raise colts which, perhaps required an original outlay of no more than $10 or $15. When the colt is three years old it is disposed of for $50 or $60, or even less, and the unenterprising farmer grows about the lack of profits in stock raising, and says that a colt cannot be sold for enough to pay for its feed. His neighbor however has better sense. He pays a fair price for the getting of a colt of good breed, and when it reaches maturity he has no trouble whatever in selling it for anywhere from $100 to $500. He pockets his profits and naturally enough concludes that there are few branches of farming which pay better than the rearing of well-bred horses. The good colt ate no more and required no more care than the poor one, yet paid a good return against the absolute loss on the other.

As with horses, so with cattle. All over the State hundreds of calves come into existence every year, concerning which it is said it will not pay to rear them. And yet had proper care been used in the selection of sires, eighteen months' time would have produced a heifer or bull that would have brought a handsome price. Owners of the ordinary kinds of stock cattle raised in California think they are doing well if they receive $25 or $30 for milch cows, and yet they may just as well get $100 to $150 at very little additional outlay. A recent auction sale of cattle in Oakland furnished an abundance of facts in support of this statement. The owners of the Ontare stock ranch in Santa Barbara County sold a large number of young cattle raised by them, and such prices realized as $250 for a two-year-old bull, $300 for a yearling, $310 for a nine-year-old cow, and from $85 to $200 for calves from 2 to 10 months old. And without doubt in the same locality where this stock came from can be found any number of calves every year whose owners sell them for little or nothing on the ground that it will not pay to raise them.

Nobody yet ever lost money in the production of stock of any kind of desirable breeds, and no better source of profit can be found than in the raising every year of a few calves and colts from sires of known good standing.

Fine Gold

A small oyster-can of concentrates was received here Monday from the Pamlico mine in Hawthorne district, located near the famous Lapanta. They were accumulated from the sand that is left in a horn or pan after a small quantity of rock has been pounded in a mortar and prospected, and were supposed to contain two or three dollars—sufficient to make a ring for the owner's best girl. The material was "cleaned up" at the Mint, and yielded three and a half ounces of gold nearly 1,000 fine, much to the surprise of all who had handled the concentrates. Fine gold is valued at $20.67 an ounce, so that the Pamlico metal comes within a few ounces of being absolutely pure, which is a very rare occurrence, even in placer diggings.
